The cornerstone of Roosevelt House, which, as Mrs. William Curtis Demorest, one of the vice-presidents of the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Association, explained is designed to be "a live, pulsating memorial, full of civic activities," was laid yesterday at 28 East Twentieth street, where Col. Roosevelt was born October 27, 1858. The original house has been torn down but the new structure to be erected there by the association will contain rooms which will be exact reproductions of the old, as well as an audition of the old, as well as an audition intended to be a centre for all s of the old, as well as an audi-rooms which will be exact reproductions of the old, as well as an auditorium intended to be a centre for all time for the teaching of true Americanism.

A distinguished party gathered at the ceremonics to pay homage to the memory of the dead statesman on the second anniversary of his death. Extra details of police were necessary to handle the crowd which packed Twentieth street between Broadway and Fourth avenue and traffic there was diverted to other thoroughfares during the afternoon.

Mrs. Roosevelt was seated in the front row on a platform erected about the cornerstone and J. J. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, and Major-Gen. Leonard Wood, both intimate friends of her husband, were on either side of her. Other members of the family present were Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., Mr., and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, the former President's sister; Mrs. James Roosevelt and Mrs. Franklin D. SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF ROOSEVELT'S DEATH

Children and Others Make Pilgrimages to Grave.

Church bells at Oyster Bay began tolling early yesterday morning to mark the second anniversary of the death of Col. Theodore Roosevelt. The flags were put at half staff and at the noon recess the children of the Cov. Neck school, where Col. Roosevelt used to play Santa Claus, visited the grave and placed a wreath upon it. There was a long procession of visitors during the day and the grave was banked high with flowers. Twenty of Col. Roosevelt's oldest friends went to the grave together and with pared heads listened to an address by G. A. Van Valkenburg, editor of the Philadelphia North American, and forned an organization to be known as the Roosevelt Pilgrimage. Church bells at Oyster Bay began toll

Gen. Wood's Address. The cornerstone was cemented in its place by Gen. Wood and it was he who delivered the principal address. "Theodore Roosevelt needs no memorial," said the general. "He lives and will ever live in the hearts of the American people. He is one of the trinity of great American Presidents—Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt. He has easily been the most dominant influence in American life since the days of Lincoln; dominant because his life and works were an inspiration for all that is best in public and in private life. "This house is to be a place of pill-grimage to which the youth of American will come and gather much of inspiration for service, for good citizenship and clean, helpful living. Here Theodore Roosevelt was born and passed his early years. Here as a child he peopled the air about him with the heroic figures of the past and determined to make himself strong and fit to play his part to best serve his country and mankind." The crowd in the street interrupted Gen. Wood with cheering when he said: "Never has America needed his fearless voice and his clear vision more than in the years since his death. He was great not only because of his achievements, but even more because of his character and ideals. He had the modesty of true greatness; he welcomed advice; he sought to surround himself with the ablest Americans of his time. His sympathies were as broad as the world, limited by neither race nor creed. He
